

Boxing up the text. With me, annotate this letter and box it up so we can find the features to include in persuasion

Dear Sir

I am writing to urge you to rid my locality of a terrible pest. The Troll that lives under the bridge near my home is causing my family great distress.

Firstly, every time my sensitive wife trip-trots over the bridge, he leaps out and makes her jump out of her skin. He then rolls about laughing until green, slimy tears roll down his cheeks and he tumbles back into his den. Is this the behaviour of a reasonable citizen? That troll is irresponsible, rude and mean. I fear that if there are more incidents like this, my wife's heart will miss a beat and she will require expensive veterinary care. For this reason, the troll must go.

In addition, when my vulnerable, young kid skips down to the stream's edge for a refreshing sip of water, the hideous creature threatens to eat him. This is traumatising my son, causing him to have horrific nightmares. He is so nervous about approaching the river bank that he may become dehydrated. Just imagine how worried we feel. Surely you can see this is unacceptable. Are we going to let one troll threaten all our children?

Furthermore, this monster's appalling behaviour is bringing down the value of land in this locality. It is obvious that all the well-behaved, polite goats, who pay all their council tax on time, will be compelled to find fresh pastures. Surely you don't want this part of the countryside to be seen as a no-go area for respectable families. Without a doubt, this troll is a menace. It is certain that he is driving goats away from town. Do you really want this place to be ruled over by this horrible individual?

In summary, trust that you and your team of exterminators will be quick in acting to rid our beautiful valley of the terrifying Troll. It is unfair that he is terrorising my peace-loving family. Just imagine what a lovely place we will live in without him.

Yours faithfully

B.B.G.Gruff